HOUSTON MUSICIAN, BRAD TORRES, TO DIGITALLY BROADCAST A BRAND NEW MUSICAL

BRAD HAS BEEN AT THE CENTER OF A CITY-WIDE PUSH FOR ARTISTS TO DIGITIZE THEIR CREATIVE WORK IN ORDER TO MAINTAIN THEIR LIVELIHOODS.

Brad Torres has been spending his quarantine time building up his online reputation and creating new art at breakneck speed. This will come to a crux when he stages a brand new, wholly original musical, using only artists stuck in quarantine and digital live-stream broadcasting technology. Brad has already teased some of his compositions in previous live digital performances, a medium more and more artists are needing to use to safeguard themselves financially during the pandemic. Brad has promised the show will mount on April 30th, 2020.

In addition, Brad plans to document his music-making process to host on his digital platform, which can be accessed from his facebook at fb.me/BradTorresHTX. Brad's previous work has been described as "linguistically reminiscent of Amanda Palmer," and the press has said of Brad, "[he rose to] the challenge of creating a musical from damn-near-impossible source material.

Brad is a Houston-based musician and writer, specializing in musical theatre and solo rock performance. His original rock has been described as moody, theatrical and gothic, and his style compared to Desplat and Satie. He is an award-winning, internationally-touring composer.

Please get in touch with Brad at BradTorresHTX@gmail.com for guest list, interviews, or promo copies of his work as it releases.
